Deutscher Anwaltverein DAV
(German Bar Association), Berlin

The German Bar Association (DAV) is an independent professional association open to all lawyers in Germany. Its purpose is to further the professional and economic interests of the German legal community, and to follow the development of jurisprudence and proposed legislation. The Association DAV is especially concerned with the education and training of law students and thus also with quality control within the profession. It also provides students and young lawyers with opportunities to acquaint themselves with the legal profession by facilitating internships as well as professional training throughout Germany.

Editorial Concept

“Anwaltsblatt Karriere” is a publication of the German Bar Association geared towards law students and legal clerks. It provides detailed information about the practise of law, the most common professional choice for young legal professionals. Roughly 10,000 jurists pass the Second State Examination each year, and about 80% of them become lawyers.

The journal reports about the practise of law in both large international law firms, as well as mid-sized firms and interesting start-up practises. “Anwaltsblatt Karriere” reveals the interesting job market into which future lawyers can gain insights through work experiences and clerkship appointments. The broad scale of the legal job market is documented in its biannual issues.

The current online-job market, www.anwaltsblatt-karriere.de, can be a very useful tool for finding internships, traineeships, and entry-level positions.

In short, “Anwaltsblatt Karriere” demonstrates the many facets of the legal profession.
